THE GIRLHOOD OF SHAKESPEARE'S HEROINES.

BY MARY COWDEN CLARKE.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

* * The Proprietors have taken some pains to see the Journals which have noticed the work, but they fear that some kind notices have still escaped them.

"There is a grace veritably Shakespearian in the appearance of the heroine. It prefigures the whole coming harmony of Portia's life."—Leigh Hunt's Journal.

"Mrs. Cowden Clarke, whose 'Concordance of Shakespeare' shows such mastery of the letter of the poet's works, now evinces her appreciation of their spirit in a series of fictions entitled 'The Girlhood of Shakespeare's Heroines.'"—Household Narrative.

"The design is one that would afford ample play to a lively and sympathetic imagination, and we are bound to say that the ingenious thought is admirably carried out in the first part; in which the fairy-land of Portia's girlhood is painted with an abundant flow of genial fancy, and in an easy and graceful style."—Morning Chronicle.

"It is a spirited, charming story, full of adventure, friendship, and love, with characters nicely drawn and carefully discriminated. Many readers will thank the conceit that has added one to the many beautiful tales with which our literature now teems. Mrs. Cowden Clarke is a poetess in her own right, and need not draw inspiration even from Shakespeare."—Economist.

"Mrs. Cowden Clarke's fancy of Portia in her girlhood is pretty. We heartily recognize Mrs. Clarke's love as the origin of this book."—Athenæum.

"An elegant performance, in every page of which the presence of an accomplished mind is visible."—Hull Advertiser.

"It was a nice and subtle task to infer the antecedents of the heroine; but Mrs. Cowden Clarke, by the aid of woman's intuition, and the insight which comes of deep knowledge, has accomplished it with admirable taste and feeling."—Northampton Mercury.

"The Girlhood of Shakespeare's Heroines' is no mere book-making, but a work of love, executed with a masterly power, by one whose study, as well as fine womanly nature, present her as among those we should have considered most competent to such a task."—Manchester Examiner and Times.

"We hope we have said sufficient to indicate our high appreciation of the beauty of Mrs. Clarke's idea, as well as of the truthfulness of its execution, and to tempt our readers to make themselves as well acquainted with the girlhood of Shakespeare's heroines as we trust they are with the heroines themselves."—Northern Star.

"The manners and characters show a lively feeling of the old Italian manners and Italian stories. It is an elegant piece of writing."—Weekly News.

"Portia' is written in a most charming style."—Weekly Dispatch.

"Mrs. Cowden Clarke's first story has one of the highest qualities of fiction—it is no flickering shadow, but seems of real growth. It is full of lively truth; and shows nice perception of the early elements of character with which we become acquainted in its wholeness, and in the ripeness of years. The incident is well-woven; the colour is blood-warm; and there is the presence of a sweet grace and gentle power."—Nonconformist.

"Their early years, as described by Mrs. Clarke, foreshadow exactly what a reflective mind would suppose to be the infant heralds of the deep feelings with which the great poet has invested them. In each of these tales the interest is great, and well sustained throughout."—Dramatic and Musical Review.

"An agreeable style, sufficiency of invention and dramatic power, and much good feeling."—Spectator.

"This is a pretty feminine idea,—to give us imaginary antecedents to Shakespeare's principal female characters. Well fitted for the task is Mrs. Cowden Clarke."—Scotsman.

"A serial of rather a novel, and certainly of a very ambitious, character. The first tale of the series is skilfully managed."—Berrou's Worcester Journal.

"Such a task could not have been confided to, or assumed by, a more congenial mind."—Norfolk Chronicle.

"Well the labour of love is performed."—Gateshead Observer.

"Portia's girlhood is characterized by feminine grace and vivacity of style."—Birmingham Herald.

"There is something ingenious and poetic in the conception. The first tale, 'Portia,'—is a good specimen of her powers for realizing her design."—Leader.

"If we may judge from the first tale, the entire work, when completed, will be both entertaining and instructive."—York Herald.

"The authoress has combined, in producing the work under notice, excellent taste with deep research and extensive acquaintance with the writings which she has made her favorite study."—Plymouth Times.

"A nice perception of character, and the utmost delicacy in its delineation, are united with a truly poetical conception of all the circumstances necessary to place it in the boldest relief, so that we may finally expect the young life of Shakespeare's heroines to be placed before us scarcely in a less interesting form than their after career in the pages of the great master."—Coventry Herald.

"The first tale is charmingly imagined. The character is delicately prepared for its elaboration by the poet. The incidents never exceed probability, but seem perfectly natural. In the style there is much quaintness, in the sentiment much tenderness."—Birmingham Journal.

"In the early history of Portia, the eminent author of the 'Concordance' has most successfully entered upon her undertaking."—Plymouth Journal.

"A most important elucidation of some of the most perfect delineations of female character which have ever been written."—Ball's Weekly Messenger.

"It was a bold undertaking to attempt the weaving into classic story the girlhood of Lady Macbeth; but Mrs. Cowden Clarke has supplied, in the elegant little volume before us, ample evidence of her competency to perform, if required, a still more arduous task. There is a terrible fidelity recognized at once by the reason and the imagination in Mrs. Cowden Clarke's description of the birth of Lady Macbeth—the death of her mother—her own wayward and solitary childhood—the weak, passive disposition of her foolish doting old father, as proper preludes to the performance of the tragic deed which placed a royal diadem upon her brow."—Hull Advertiser.

"The story is too deeply interesting to allow the reader to lay it down till he has seen it to the end, and its manner is in stern keeping with the matter. An air of wild grandeur and barbarous feudalism pervades it. It is no light praise to say that in reading the story of the 'Thane's Daughter,' no doubt enters the mind of the reader that it is she who afterwards became the treacherous hostess of imperial Duncan, and who lamented in her night-wanderings that 'all the perfumes of Arabia would not sweeten this little hand.'"—Northampton Mercury.

"A fine fancy sketch of the bard's female characters, when children, before they burst into dramatic life."—Eddowes' Shrewsbury Journal.

"If any living female writer could do justice to this conception, it is certainly Mary Cowden Clarke, who, in addition to a lively imagination, is so thoroughly imbued with the letter and spirit of the Shakesperian drama."—Kent Herald.

"It was the idea of a delicate fancy to fashion a preliminary romance to the 'catastrophes already ordained' of Shakespeare. There was something in the task that may be compared to the statement of a problem. Mrs. Clarke has worked out this problem with consummate skill, so far as can be judged of in the two first tales. The two heroines spring up from girlhood to the more mature age at which the great master introduces them to us, and the growth of their mind is traced with an artistic adherence to the originals, which shows that they must have been deeply studied and thoroughly understood. Altogether, we are of opinion that a perusal of 'The Girlhood of Shakespeare's Heroines' will lead not only to a more lively appreciation, but in many cases to a better understanding, of their great originals."—Eastern Counties Herald.

"The authoress has a vigorous and truthful conception, and she has moulded the infant and the girl—after-births of imagination as they are—skilfully to bear a kindred resemblance to the full-blown and vigorous-minded original. Even from the very infancy of the thane's daughter, the authoress has painted her as not stepping aside from the object at which she has aimed; and her ambition only slumbers because, in the solitude of the thane's castle, there is nothing to arouse it."—Lloyd's Newspaper.

"In following out this conception, Mrs. Clarke displays no little subtlety of thought and imagination, and the incidents she has devised are well adapted to carry out her purpose."—Leeds Times.

"The Girlhood of Shakespeare's Heroines' is a new and worthy contribution to the Shakesperian library of romance. We know what we say when we are uttering this; but we are confident that Charles Lamb, mindful of the old Italian tales, would confirm it."—New York Literary World.

"The spring days of Lady Macbeth are indeed finely conceived; the cruel child, and the selfish and remorseless girl, whose maiden love is depicted like that of the eagle, without one touch of the dove, are alike skilfully revealed to us; while, going back yet further, the very birth-chamber, where she first sees the light, has something weird about it, as if to foreshadow the witches' prophecy and the coming time. Mrs. Cowden Clarke must have a true poet's soul to have created the antecedents of such a character with the truth to nature and fidelity to Shakespeare's ideal which she has done."—New Monthly Belle Assemblée.

"Both stories are deeply interesting; and are full of beautiful passages which confirm the high reputation of their author for skill in female portraiture and depth of feeling."—Cheltenham Journal.

"The Thane's Daughter' is a novellette possessing greater interest and displaying more constructive skill and fertility of invention than many more pretentious works."—Worcester Chronicle.

"A brief extract from this very interesting story will show how skilfully Mrs. Cowden Clarke can paint the germs of character in youth."—Hampshire Independent.

"The ideas worked upon are good, the suggestions of a generous tone of feeling, and of an enlightened sense of moral responsibilities."—Liverpool Mercury.

"Mrs. Clarke exhibits genius of no common order in catching the spirit of the immortal bard's creations; and her portraitures are characterized by pure feeling, chaste expression, and considerable dramatic power."—Glasgow Constitutional.

"There is a great deal of constructive skill exhibited in these tales, and particularly in the one under notice, which gives a lively interest to their progress; and the meeting and farther acquaintance of Helena and the young Bertram are described with such true touches of the natural and the picturesque, combined, as to give the whole an air of wondrous reality."—Weekly Dispatch.

"The character of Desdemona is most delicately deduced; and the subordinate personages, and incidents, are devised with great skill and perfect feeling."—Northampton Mercury.

"Many may read these delicate pictures,—for delicate and refined they are in the true sense of a woman's delicacy and refinement,—who are as yet but approaching the threshold of a temple wherein lie riches of which they have at present but a vague idea. To them such books may be the pioneers to future enjoyment, to future wealth, and with such consideration we heartily welcome them, if on no other grounds. But they possess also individual and legitimate claims for approval; they are written with great felicity of style, they are full of interesting pictures, they betray an evidence of deep thought, of perception of character, and of the reflective faculty not always permitted to that class of humanity over which we have deputed ourselves lords and masters."—Manchester Examiner and Times.

NOVELLO VERSUS JAMES.

Injunction to protect the Copyright edition of Mendelssohn's "LIEDER OHNE WORTE."

Take Notice, that His Honor the VICE-CHANCELLOR KNIGHT BRUCE has this day granted an Injunction against the Proprietor and Publisher of a musical work called "The Pianista," to restrain them, their servants and agents from selling or otherwise disposing of any copy or copies of No. 129 of that work, and from printing, publishing, selling, or disposing of any book, publication, or work whatever containing a Piece of Music composed by FELIX MENDELSSOHN BARTHOLDY, called "LIEDER OHNE WORTE" (Songs without words), Book 1, or any part thereof, the Copyright of which piece of music belongs to me.

AND I HEREBY GIVE NOTICE that I am also the Proprietor of the Copyright of Book 3 of "LIEDER OHNE WORTE."

AND I HEREBY GIVE NOTICE, that any person printing or causing to be printed, either for sale or exportation, the said Books 1 and 3 of "LIEDER OHNE WORTE" without my consent in writing, and any person who shall sell, publish, or expose to sale or hire, or cause to be sold, published, or exposed to sale or hire, or shall have in his possession for sale or hire any copy of the said No. 129 of "The Pianista," or any copy of the said Books Nos. 1 and 3 so unlawfully printed as aforesaid, and any person multiplying copies of the said Books Nos. 1 and 3 which shall have been so unlawfully printed as aforesaid, will render himself liable to proceedings by me.—Dated this 15th day of February, 1851.

On the 24th of March, (Motion having been made to dissolve the Injunction)—The Vice-Chancellor said, "that there appeared more than enough, upon the evidence, to support the Injunction until further order."

Original Pocket Metronomes, D. Scholefield, Maker, South Street, Huddersfield.

These Metronomes are 46 inches in length, and vibrate from 360 to 55 without taking two beats for one number. When folded up they may be carried in the pocket, and are warranted to give the same time as Maelzel's Metronomes. Prices:—Tape and Metal Case, 2s.; Ribbon and Fancy Cases, 2s. 6d.; Measuring Tape and Metronome combined in Stop Box, 4s. Sold by all Music-sellers, or sent free by post upon the receipt of the amount in Postage Stamps or Post-office Order.

TESTIMONIAL.—"Carlisle, Feb. 8, 1850. I have examined Mr. Scholefield's Pocket Metronomes, and tested them beside Maelzel's, and find that their vibrations exactly correspond. I consider them very ingenious and useful instruments, and have no doubt that they will prove serviceable to the profession and the musical public in general.—H. E. FORD, Organist of Carlisle Cathedral."

Now Publishing, under the sanction of the Ecclesiological (late Cambridge Camden) Society.
